

Document 13: Marathon Running - Training and Physiology

Marathon running covers a distance of 42.195 kilometers (26.2 miles). Training involves building endurance, speed, and proper nutrition. Physiological adaptations include improved cardiovascular efficiency and muscle metabolism. Mental toughness is equally important to overcome fatigue. Marathons are held worldwide, attracting elite athletes and amateurs alike.